NEED

In the 21st century, no genre has appreciated as much success in the theatrical, home video, and merchandising markets as horror films. With the rise of boutique home video and apparel labels, significant works and works that were relegated to obscurity have found a new fan-base and continue to be appreciated by original fan base.

The ever-growing interest to pull back the curtains on these beloved films and television shows in this genre has been proven relentless, so who better to give us the juicy, unauthorized stories behind our favorite works than the people who made them and built distinguished careers of their own.
